Method

To improve the validity of the sample, and thus the validity of the results, for the 2015 survey we used a stratified random sampling technique to choose a sample of parents from each school to participate in the survey. These targeted parents were contacted via traditional mail and asked to participate either online or in a paper version to be mailed back to RER. In order to encourage participation those parents who completed the survey were entered in a drawing to win one of several gift cards to Wal-Mart. Participant numbers were assigned to each family in order to enter them in the drawing and to keep track of those parents who have not yet completed the survey so that they can be contacted again.

The stratified random sample was performed using characteristics of the students to choose participants, with gender and race being the characteristics used for this particular sample. Each school was treated as a research site and a sample calculated based on the student demographics of that school—matching the overall demographic percentages of the sample to the school.

An initial mailing of 1500 surveys in April of 2015 resulted in a low response rate. Consequently another 1500 surveys were sent in May of 2015, which resulted in a larger sample. Each survey was sent to the parent/guardian of a charter school student by mail, and included a cover letter in English and Spanish, as well as a survey in English, a self-addressed stamped envelope to use to return the survey to RER. For those parents/guardians who were identified as Latino/Latina, a copy of the survey in Spanish was also included in the packet. A total of 797 surveys were returned.

After the parent surveys were completed, Research and Evaluation Resources performed the necessary descriptive statistics (frequency counts, proportions and any other relevant analyses), breaking down the data by school and ethnicity.
